Drive there?

The Stockton path is smooth. you can skateboard on it and I see roller bladers all the time. Yep drive

Great

Pull in at the little tiny car park just after you cross over the bridge. Can you send Everett back over please 🙏 ?

What should I gps, Stockton park? So you have a google maps marker to drive to?

Okay will keep an eye out. Sending him over now. When are you leaving, now?

If you don't mind me prying, I was wondering what it is your boys are into TV wise, toys, action figures.

I 3D printed a Freddy Fazbear character yesterday, Christian was in tears due to my reluctance at first to comply with his request. It's bloody hard to parent effectively given the current circumstances I face given the current custody arrangements...

Fortunately, it doesn't look scary at all just a happy bear but it would be great to try and align if I'm able to what your boys are into.

Are the kids at school where you boys go into Freddy Fazbear as well? It seems Christian and Joshua peers are very much into the Five Nights at Freddy's universe even at Joshua age.

Are the kids at school where you boys go into Freddy Fazbear as well? It seems Christian and Joshua peers are very much aware of the Five Nights at Freddy's universe even at Joshua age. As an example, McKenzie (Joshua best friend at Merewether Heights) gifted Joshua Five Nights at Freddy's Plush toys earlier this year.

Just looking for some advice on some strategies.

It's complexed; the boys were reluctantly allowed by both parents during the marital relationship and there are numerous time where both Heather and I played good Cop / bad Cop towards Freddy. Sorry for the long message.

I had a really meaningful experience at Church last night. At one point, we broke into smaller groups to share our personal views and experiences in response to questions about Church, God, and Christ. The discussions were really engaging, and our group was led by David, who's the principal of a local high school – a really nice guy. I also met Sam, and Greg was there too. Poor Sam—I made the classic mistake of starting our conversation by pointing out how tall he is. (I know, not the best way to start!) Thankfully, he was really gracious about it—such a nice man.

For some reason, I still haven't introduced myself properly to Greg. I'll make a point to connect with him the next time I get the chance.

During the discussion led by David, there was a moment where I felt like I could have shared more about my own situation, but I stayed quiet. Part of me held back because another woman in the group was clearly dealing with some significant trauma, and it felt more appropriate to listen in that moment.

Thanks again for introducing me to HBC. It's been an interesting transition from the Catholic approach, but I feel it aligns more closely with the kind of relationship I've always strived to have with God throughout my life.

And I also need to shift my focus and set aside my grievances towards my soon-to-be ex-wife, so I can prioritize what's best for the boys.

I suppose as they start at 9:25 anyways it's not much of a stretch to have some teachers here for the gap.

What time do your boys normally start?

Was their school as ambiguous in their communications?

From what I can see, this is a normal a school day here at Merewether Heights, usually staff I'm used to seeing being present

Thanks for the feedback.

I would have liked for Christian to have taken off and engaged with other boys. Joshua too and for the most part, Joshua did well in this regard.

It's going to be much easier for Joshua I think because he is younger naturally wants to engage with people.

Yes, in some ways he appears to be addicted to screens when with me but ultimately, what Christian needs is the freedom to have screen time at Mom's too because I suspect if that were to happen, he would attribute a lot less weight in its importance when with me.

Both boys are cramming in what they feel they're needs are when they are with me into a tight window and.

What we need with Mom is a united front were both parents allow a reasonable amount of screen time.

Joshua is less impacted because there's nothing wrong with being social but apparently Mom has been doing playdates either which is probably why he is so involved with your boys but then again, hard to say, Josh is a bit of a social butterfly.

But I had a good talk with Christian in the car ride home yesterday about the importance of leaning into the church community and reminded him you and the church are God's people. Christian very much believes in God and Jesus and prayer before bed is very important to him.

And he is starting to like Church, he surprised me last night when he shared he learned something new about stars at HBC yesterday - it showed me he is listening and engaging.

Lastly, at that time of the day and one of the issues I need to sort out with Mom for Christian benefit, at that time of the day he is coming down from his ADHD medication which I can tell you from personal experience, coming down is coming down and quite similar

I need to get involved we ith his paediatrician again of get Mom to look into how do we align the "coming down" with a healthy bedtim instead of 4:00pm.

I think Christian screen time addition is perhaps being missrepreaented and need to be re-evaluated after both parents can support it and manage it in a healthier united front is what I am trying to say.

I'm going to have to put all of this in my amended application

And Christian knows because of yesterday talk, God's people, there a commonality to build upon with him.

He did say he didn't engage more yesterday because he is was nervous. There could be some truth in that, the medication down would make him more anxious to opening up and conversing with others.

Definitely compounded by trying to fit in screen time that is being denied entirely from his point of view at mom's.

Yeah challenging but important to remember you do the best with what you can and it's a really tough thing he's going through. He seems to like structure a lot more than Josh. In the absence of sound 3rd party guidance, they will not know the truth and are more likely to accept untruth perhaps unintentionally for personal gain, this is the very real peril both Christian and Josh face ATM.

In I.T. we call this need a "sanity check"

No better sanity check for people than church people.

I can only begin to speculate what the motives are. Certainly lossing time with the boys slightly in an effort to maintain 50/50.

I think it's financially driven however she sent me a message on Our Family Wizard suggesting as much.

I'll get a stable job next which will help.

Have you happened to come across Christian's Adventure Time Boom book? He mentioned he packed it into his school bag, but we couldn't find it when we looked for it while playing Adventure Time Monopoly last night.

Also, we realized just before school this morning that Christian's crucifix necklace was missing. I believe it's somewhere around the house, but I haven't been able to locate it yet. I'm planning on picking up a few extras just so we don't run into this issue in the future. Hard but it needs to be done

I didn't hear a thing don't worry

I literally cannot take it away without a negative reaction first thing in the morning before mediation - it's dopamine right.

I have to have it removed the night before and didn't do it last night, I was tired and didn't feel like arguing with him.

The one off night is hard on me and the boys - transitions are harder because they know and I know there's no opportunity the following day.

Based upon my research, it's hard to yeild a profit pursuing anything that is too extensive of a job.

For the most part, printing needs to be monitored for a marid of reasons but one such is you want to be able to physically check on the print to ensure it's going well and there are no defects in an effort to avoid wasting time and money.

Also, in an effort to maximise profit, I'd need to focus on small personal items and so those should take less time to print and to meet volume demands someone would have to be present to clear the chamber before a new print could be started.

The drive behind it all is to pursue something that allows me to be present for the boys.

But, I still need to get a normal job I reckon for other reasons.

This is just something for me to plug away at, I'm hoping it could eventually lead to me being more available at the house for example.

I just need at the moment to establish a portfolio or light catalogue of random stuff, one offs of things I think people may be interested in.

And I have a good sense of what that may be and how to pursue it properly all above board.

It's a great opportunity for the boys too if it works out

The other Avenue I can pursue is making hard to replace find parts available.

For example, a plastic gear broke in Loons the robots leg and so I can scan the good gear and print a replacement.

However, not sure what the legality of this specific avenue is as I would have to get permission from the company but it serves as a good example.

I often use both Linux and Windows to tackle projects and my labs need dual boot and if Im pursuing software compilation I have to use VirtualBox as well.

From Chatbot, which languages do you think apply to Christian and Joshua? It's an interesting concept isn't it;

The concept of love languages, developed by Dr. Gary Chapman, describes five primary ways people express and receive love.

Understanding these love languages can help improve relationships by recognizing how each person feels most appreciated and valued. Here are the five love languages:

1. Words of Affirmation: This love language involves expressing affection through spoken or written words. Compliments, encouragement, and verbal appreciation make someone feel loved and valued.

2. Acts of Service: Actions speak louder than words for those who favor this love language. Doing helpful tasks or going out of your way to make their life easier is a meaningful way to show love.

3. Receiving Gifts: For some, thoughtful gifts are a powerful way to feel loved. It's not about materialism but about the thought and effort behind the gift that makes them feel valued.

4. Quality Time: Spending undivided, meaningful time together is essential for people with this love language. They feel loved when they have someone's full attention and can engage in shared activities or conversations.

5. Physical Touch: Physical expressions, like holding hands, hugging, and other forms of affectionate touch, help some people feel deeply connected and loved.

Josh spaghetti is up in 10!

I'm going to take the boys to Lambton Pool tomorrow morning, you guys should come

(Josh idea)

He asked on the way home.

And were going for Bunnings Sausage on Sunday, lol

I've been to Bunnings enough recently. Tomorrow we are having family Christmas all day. Would be keen another time when it's hot tho.

Oh right, the the lawn mower.

Sounds good! Enjoy!

Tiring but it has been good. Getting student to get and participate is quite hard since they are very self-protective and opinionated these days.

Interesting, If I understand your correctly, perhaps its the internet which makes it easier to surround yourself with other like minded individuals ultimatley serving as negative to growth feedback loop of sorts.

And I suspect that due to how advertising works right? Indetfyng your like and serving up more of the same.

Say I was going to ask you, they have good deals right now on Bibles on Amazon due to the black friday sale, do you have any recommendations?

I'm looking at a crossway. There is a NSV thin which would be good for church

I'm looking at crossway. There is a NSV thin which would be good for church but what do you guys used for bible study, was thinking of NIV or ESV and there's also a CSB?

Wednesday 27 Nov 2024 • 3:03 pm

Sadly this is so true. NIV is very useful. For kids perhaps International Children's Bible or New Living Translation

ESV is less accessible but more true (as in literal) to the original language

CSB is not bad either but less common

As in we don't use it at church. ESV we issue occasional as a secondary translation in sermons but not heaps often.

They will chew and pee on grass which means you will need to move the cage every 1-2 days ideally to save your grass dying (or ours if you don't want your to be patchy which is fine). I'd ideally move their shelters within their cage every day too to keep patches from occurring even if you don't move the whole cage).

If based upon the video alone, that can be done with traditional filament 3D printers.

That process we viewed would not use SLA.

The SLS is the commercial approach to what I could do at home with the right modifications of the printer but scalability wise, the SLS process is better in terms of speed and no risk of clogging

SLA is the resin based printing which I have chosen not to pursue, much greater detail but high cost, reduced strength and toxic.

I'm confident I could.

I've been thinking about a shell replacement for quite some time now for both switch lites because they were purchased used.

But the replacement shells as cool as they are, the plastic used is of less quality (apparently)

I would just take a look at a teardown video on YouTube and for so long as the battery can be accessed without tampering with the screen it should be a simple repair.

Do you have a source for a replacement battery in mind?

I have a heating pad for glue separation for modern iPads for example but you do not need this for this type of repair.

They said Mom has had them very busy and they want time to do what they want.

Fortunately I got them out to the ocean baths yesterday which was an effort but they had a great time once we were at it. Had a few good teaching moments with Christian yesterday and last night. His ongoing need for FNAF is content/merchandise is insidious. I explained to him it's at the juncture where it could be anything and it would still be a concern for me. He threw a fit when I denied spending 80.00 for a FNAF Lego figure. So now I'm 3D printing a Glam Rock Freddy Figure he can later paint. At least Glam Rock Freddy looks bright and cheerful.

I'm fine, sorry for the delayed response and I appreciate you checking up on me.

No problem at all. The cops came looking for u last week and it really got me worried. Do u need me to help u do anything around the house?

I'll be back soon so no need to help, thanx for offering though!

Cops - yes, long story but ultimately a misunderstanding, tell you about it later when I see you next.

Can I pop over and say hi? 🖐️

Saturday 15 Mar 2025 • 5:34 am

Sure

Saturday 15 Mar 2025 • 7:29 am

Yep Everett and I are keen. Let's go to the ocean baths. We can drive if u want

Sure, let's do it! Reay to go in 10?

Yep 👍 will be ready then

How did u go?

Thursday 20 Mar 2025 • 11:18 am

Kids weren't at school

Guess she kept them home sick

Ah ok. Well good news is that there wasn't a nasty confrontation and I guess bad news is she is ready for battle

The bad news is the boys will never forgive her

This I know

My hope is that they'll get help to unpack that. Perhaps forgive but not forget
