Absolutely

Sorry I've been MIA or seem disinterested, Ive been quite sick this week

And honestly it ridiculous at just how much I'm working these days

The house I moved into has its share of issues quote a bit in fact but grossly so given the circumstances of my pending divorce, kids in my care and having to turn approach the home with the mindset, if it looks dirty, it is dirty

Mold, a perfect example

So the good in all of it is the inside of the home due to my efforts is a drastic improvement in terms of presentation then what it was when I took it on.

Diamond. Late August I called Martin and was very transparent about my legal matter. He suggested bringing the timeline all forward and instead but asked him for a few more weeks because I wanted to progress my legal matter to completion further in an effort to be more present and I shared a deadline of a week or so which I shared with him. Good news, earlier the this week Heather and I did come to an agreement or rather she was forced into accepting an agreement that her lawyer extended that was never intended to be accepted by me I suspect.

It's great connecting with you. I'm just finding out who will be speaking with you. We do have a Tier 1 position going. I'm not sure if that is suitable your side. Daniel suggested it's possible you may see it as a viable starting point, but it certainly is a junior position. Could I please grab your best email for contact? Rob.

Stephen, I'll mention our conversation to Chris and Brooke. I'm sure they'll be in touch, but Chris is off today unwell, so I'm not certain of timeframe as we may not see him this week. I didn't explicitly say this, but I imagine with the nature of the engagement we discussed, it's implied that this would be an unpaid internship? I look forward to seeing how you progress. Rob.

Stephen Cooke (He/Him) • 6:34 AM

Stephen Cooke (He/Him) • 6:34 AM

Hi Robert,

Thank you for the message. I'm sorry to hear that Chris is unwell and hope he recovers soon.

I want to be completely honest with you; I'm currently going through a separation, with mediation scheduled for later this month, and I'll also be moving from my current address. My current custody arrangements are Week 1: I have my two boys from Thursday after school until Monday morning, and in Week 2 just the Thursday night. I wanted to share this to highlight my need for an income and to let you know that I can be at the office more often than it might have seemed at first.

I have purchased exam vouchers for CompTIA Security+ and Network+ as well as study materials for the two courses and am progressing well.

I am very interested in your offer but need to secure an income, which may impact my ability to fully commit to the proposed internship. Would it be possible to have a structured internship that transitions to full-time employment by October/November? This arrangement would include clear conditions, such as the completion of specific courses during the internship period. A 3-4 month internship, as you suggested, starting in July, for example, with defined performance metrics and a mid-term review to assess my progress in gaining skills, would be ideal and upon successful completion of these criteria, progress in gaining skills, would be ideal and, upon successful completion of these criteria, would lead to a full-time position.

In the meantime, if there are any other paid positions at Diamond I.T. that I could pursue to help with my income as I work towards this, I would be open to that as well.

I look forward to hearing what you think.

Best regards,

Stephen

Please tell Chris I know better, to never just reboot a computer when addressing an I.T. issue unless of course I suppose it is a sensitive system in an effort to stop a potential attack / data extraction.

Can't tell you how many times I've been presented with an unexpected result in my home lab and I have had to literally drop everything else to analyse that system and and the devices involved to get to the root cause of the issue.

Simply rebooting often leads to missing out on identifying the root cause of an I.T. issue.

Since starting at Diamond IT, I've gained a new perspective on operating systems like Linux and Windows, recognizing the distinct purposes they each serve. They approach permissions, security, accounting, and transparency from different angles. With Windows, hardening typically happens after installation, while Linux—especially Arch—comes hardened by default, requiring the administrator to selectively open up and reduce restrictions as needed.

Stephen Cooke (He/Him) • 2:57 PM

AD, AAD and 365 - I honestly don't think there is a better vehicle for what is offered as an overall service. I am interested in fully understanding it as quickly as possible though and then seeing where I can slot Linux in. I suspect there may be value in running Linux from Win Server based on what I know this far for much needed transparency and acconting. I also see perhaps value in a minimalistic Linux backbone that draws upon bleeding edge security updates serving as a firewall and essentially encapsulating a windows domain controller as a virtual moat so to speak. Don't know if I can be done yet or if it should, lol.

I also want to get a better understanding of the Microsoft business services overall so I can figure out viable Linux alternatives.

Stephen Cooke (He/Him) • 3:00 PM

I can see you're largely seeing through a Linux lens. Before making judgement, get a good understanding of the overall MS ecosystem. The power is in the wide footprint with a centralised, locked down approach to security. BTW Matt Flanagan is a long term, close friend of mine.

Stephen Cooke (He/Him) • 7:10 AM
You're absolutely right, Robert. I've been viewing things through a Linux lens. Linux tends to focus on permissions using DAC, layered like an onion, while Windows uses RBAC. Interestingly, as I've been working to harden Docker/Linux, I now realize that I've been essentially applying a simplified version of RBAC by creating multiple least-privileged users, each tied to a specific Docker web service. However, this approach has its drawbacks—it's time-consuming to set up, doesn't scale well, and presents other challenges.Having started down the MS Ecosystem path, I now see how much easier it Pursuing the MS Ecosystem further is definitely another feather in my cap I want, and it's essential for my career in I.T.

Matt appears to be a great guy, very approachable, good entrepreneural experience to draw upon. Typically after the the meet-up event they all head out to the Honeysuckle hotel and that's where I had more of an opportunity to speak with him and get a better understanding on some of his back story. At first I had a bit of a hard time understanding the concept of triage of CVE only because, from my perspective, they're all and should be treated as critical. But, that approach isn't necessarily practical and people friendly and so you have to consider vulnerability risk in theory vs in the wild, probability and what your acceptable risk aceptance tolerance for your organisation

I sent the following to Martin;

Hi Martin, I think I would be excellent in this role. I've been reflecting on my low influence score from the DISC report, and I see it as a strength. For example, I convinced my soon-to-be ex-wife to invest in a mining rig—not by being pushy, but by explaining it in a way that made sense to her. My sales approach is similar to a dynamic IP—adaptable and tailored to each individual's needs. My Linux background is also a valuable asset here. It allows me to approach challenges creatively, particularly when it comes to risk assessment. That said, I'm focused on making money quickly as demonstrated by my message to you earlier

I may reach out to Robert if you don't mind.

Stephen Cooke (He/Him) • 1:34 PM

If I can convince my heatless of an .... To buy a mining rig, surely I can do sales for Diamond.

My legal matter is moving along. I'm now representating myself and concededing wherever possible to get out. I've sent an email earlier today to her lawyer asking if we could meet for coffee and talk off the record to basically get to the bottom of what it is I need to do to walk away from this.

Sorry, but I know any hesitation on your end is a result of this.

I also started a 3d printing business this week. Not sure how that's going to go but I have ideas I want work on and 3d printing may be a part of the solution.

Hi Stephen, I'm in Sydney until Thursday... re: BTM, we're going through our process, but already have one very strong candidate.
I really believe that you will get most success out of a role that requires a lot of specialisation. You're clearly passionate about Linux. I'd suggest looking at roles in that area.
Rob.

Stephen Cooke (He/Him) • 2:36 AM

Hi Robert,

Thanks for getting back to me.

It's great that I already have Linux experience, but I definitely see the value in learning 365, Azure, and AD, so please don't count out my interest in those areas just yet! I understand that certification is key here, and I'm committed to pursuing it.

Although I haven't obtained the certificates yet, I successfully set up two separate Windows Server instances on Linux via VirtualBox—one as a domain controller and the other as a client. I was able to create a custom domain and manage AD changes from the DC to Azure with role-based permissions and SSO, all within my custom domain.

Ultimately, time was my biggest challenge. Things would have gone differently if I hadn't had so many distractions these past few months.

Ultimately, time was my biggest challenge. Things would have gone differently if I hadn't had so many distractions these past few months.

I truly appreciate the opportunity you, Martin, and Chris gave me. Even though it didn't lead to employment, your support made a huge difference for me when I needed it most. Thank you.

Yes, I love Linux, and you're probably right that it's my quickest path to paid employment. But it's a tool I'm comfortable with, and being who I am, I like learning new tools too!

I strongly believe in using the right tool for the job, and I'll be at a disadvantage if I don't develop my skills in 365 and Azure.

So, I'll keep at it, and maybe I'll reach out again once I have my certifications in place—if that's alright with you.

Take care, and please send my regards to everyone.

Best,
Stephen

So the 7 day trial

See how you find it

Stephen Cooke (He/Him) • 1:40 PM
Would this be appreciated in the hunt?

Or is it too novice?

Daniel Pludek • 2:47 PM
Would not hurt

Having them will help with those who want certificates

Wednesday? I may be able to. If I get my stuff together before then I'll let you know

Stephen Cooke (He/Him) • 1:16 PM
Nice! I have nice attire to where too, picked up some new Costco Khaki and CK dress shirts

Would that be appropriate? Or dress pants as well

Just sent the following to Robert:
Hi Robert,

Thank you for the message. I'm sorry to hear that Chris is unwell and hope he recovers soon.

Just sent the following to Robert:
Hi Robert,

Thank you for the message. I'm sorry to hear that Chris is unwell and hope he recovers soon.

I want to be completely honest with you; I'm currently going through a separation, with mediation scheduled for later this month, and I'll also be moving from my current address. My current custody arrangements are Week 1: I have my two boys from Thursday after school until Monday morning, and in Week 2 just the Thursday night. I wanted to share this to highlight my need for an income and to let you know that I can be at the office more often than it might have seemed at first.

I have purchased exam vouchers for CompTIA Security+ and Network+ as well as study materials for the two courses and am progressing well.

I am very interested in your offer but need to secure an income, which may impact my ability to fully commit to the proposed internship. Would it be possible to have a structured internship that transitions to full-time employment by October/November? This arrangement would include clear conditions, such as the completion of specific courses during the internship period. A 3-4 month internship, as you suggested, starting in July, for example, with defined performance

This arrangement would include clear conditions, such as the completion of specific courses during the internship period. A 3-4 month internship, as you suggested, starting in July, for example, with defined performance metrics and a mid-term review to assess my progress in gaining skills, would be ideal and, upon successful completion of these criteria, would lead to a full-time position.

In the meantime, if there are any other paid positions at Diamond I.T. that I could pursue to help with my income as I work towards this, I would be open to that as well.

I look forward to hearing what you think.

Best regards,

Stephen

Sorry for the delay, crazy busy day. I think the email is fair

Daniel Pludek • 8:40 AM
You are in an interesting spot. The experience, paid or not will help you immensely in getting the experience you need to find a role. On the flip side, if you are going to get this experience for free and they are saying they will hire you after, then it is fair to do it on that
