Hi Matthew,

I wanted to update you on the job I interviewed for last week. They've informed me that they intend to offer a light internship for several reasons. I don't have the details yet, but HR will be in touch soon.

Is there any chance to incorporate spousal maintenance around this? I suppose it's too early to tell and we'll need to see the specifics first. I'm also unsure about the pay, but I suspect it won't be much. Balancing this internship with another job or income source might be challenging.

However, this opportunity is with a company in the field I'm aiming to break into, and it could eventually enable me to support both myself and the boys when they are with me.

I'm not sure if you're aware, but earlier this year, I used some funds to enrol in CompTIA Network+ and Security+ courses to secure highly sought-after certifications that government and IT security organizations look for.... Which I initially was travelling well with initially but my matter really has distracted me... Fortunately, I still have a number of months to complete and I have been chugging along in it.

The company offering the internship is Diamond IT: <https://diamondit.com.au/>

What are your thoughts?

Stephen

Some more details:

- Discussed potential internship with Diamond I.T. <https://diamondit.com.au/>
- Internship duration: 3-4 months, with a potential transition to full-time employment and future consultancy role.
- Robert suggested a "light" internship to accommodate my schedule and the team's availability.
- Internship involves studying a couple of courses related to Microsoft training, likely with pay.
- Robert believes I am skilled with high potential but need to improve my Microsoft experience, especially in Active Directory.
- Confident in my ability to quickly learn necessary skills.

I'll forward the offer once received.

Stephen
